This study presents some characteristics, specific ways of interaction and self-identity elements of the individual development of the marginal personality within the psychodrama group.

Members of psychodrama group - each having specific individual or social characteristics - are often caught between the drive towards group belonging and that of loneliness, between the need of participation and that of staying apart, on the margins of the group. Taking into the consideration, but surpassing the starting point of the marginal position, this is an analysis of the dynamics of the marginal personality and of the way the leaders can offer support to be aware of his/her needs, individual timing, and become a respected group member.
